The War of the Floor started the day Joan

(nine-year-old Peter was now a Cub Scout). "We need carpets," said Joan, her head still echoing echoing echoing echoing.

"Let's plant grass seed," joked George, "and have an indoor putting green,"

"Let's wax it," cried Kathy, "and have a Dreamy dance floor." (At sixteen, dancing's a passion!)

"Let's PANT it," chimed in Peter, visualizing Indian signs in red-and-black.

or it will be when we get CARPETS!" said Joan.

But their lovely new furniture, demanded a Luxurious carpet ... and a carpet that would be strong and durable.

"Good carpets are EXPEN$IVE," said George. "Fine carpets are an INVESTMENT," replied Joan. (And the cold war continued).

Until one bright ay, Joan opened her favorite magazine and saw aFIRTH I ad showing a beautiful carpet that was JUST RIGHT.

"What about MONEY?" asked George. She showed him the ad. And pointed out how they could enjoy genuine Firth luxury immediately for SMALL SMALL payments per month. Peace was declared.

The bare floor "battlefield" was duly decorated, with the softest, most glowing carpeting imaginable.

One single instrument is going to be featured in this month's column. Moreover, every record discussed will contain only this one instrument-in a solo capacity, without accompaniment of any sort. and without association with any other instrument. However, because of its self-sufficiency, it is almost the only instrument in common usage in Western music that can stand entirely on its own feet (that is, "on its own feet" musically: I'm not referring to its physical construction). As you may have guessed, the instrument is the piano. Give the matter a moment's thought, and you will realize that, except for the organ, there is hardly another instrument upon which it is customary to give a complete concert without support from other instruments. To be sure, the harp is capable of such a feat, and one occasionally hears of a brave violinist who undertakes to give a concert of works for unaccompanied violin, but neither of these compares in frequency with the recital of works for piano alone. Among composers, hardly any has devoted his efforts so assiduously to the piano as did Frédéric Chopin. This nineteenth-century composer wrote so touchingly for the instrument that he became known as "the poet of the piano." As the greatest pianist of his century, Franz Liszt, wrote: "Chopin's music has a romantic, individual and subjective atmosphere; it expresses feelings that belong only to the composer and yet is capable of stirring instant response and sympathy." In addition to its poetic qualities, there is also a virile and forceful side to his music. These characteristics are well brought out by the performances of the young American pianist, Morton Estrin, with no loss of sensitivity. On a disc issued by Fantasy Records, Mr. Estrin plays four of Chopin's Ballades and the Fantasie in F Minor. Opus 49. These are fine performances, indeed, capturing the spirit inherent in Chopin's music, w

What I didn't know about carpet was costing me money!

"When it comes to running a house, smart me, I thought—till I went to look for new carpeting. Why, my ideas were ten years behind the times...costing me money, too. Replacements every few years, frequent cleaning bills—they all add up.

"At first I was in a whirl with all the new fibers. The more I saw, the more I got confused. Worried, too. For something as important as carpeting, I want to know what I'm paying for.

"That's how I learned about Du Pont Carpet Nylon. Of course, I loved the colors... that wonderful, thick texture... mmm! The salesman told me how Du Pont developed Carpet Nylon especially for use in carpets. But the big surprise came when he showed me that fine nylon carpeting costs no more than ordinary carpets, yet wears at least twice as long in similar constructions!

"This carpet takes on my whole family, dog and all, and looks wonderful. Scuffs, heavy furniture, spills—nothing seems to keep it from looking its best. Anything that looks so luxurious, lasts so long, and yet is so easy to take care of, is money in the bank as far as I'm concerned!"

BETTER THINGS FOR BETTER LIVING ... THROUGH CHEMISTRY
Du Pont makes fibers, not the carpet shown here.

Enjoy "The Du Pont Show With June Allyson", every Monday at 10:30 p.m., EST, on CBS-TV, and the "Today" show with Dass Garroway on NBC-TV.

Only nylon gives you all these extras:

Outwears carpets of all other carpet fibers in similar constructions by at least 2 to 1. For all its luxurious softness, nylon is the strongest, toughest, longest-wearing fiber ever used in carpeting! And moths don't like nylon!

Here's where you'll find assurance of the top luxury and performance if 100% Du Pont Carpet Nylon in the pile. When you see this label, you know you're getting the best carpet value, dollar for dollar, year after year.

Even coffee stains can be sponged away with detergent and water. In carpet tests, nylon also proved to have greatest recovery from crushing. That means the heaviest furniture or countless footsteps won't leave lasting marks.

Decorating hints, tips on care, latest news on every type of carpeting...all are in Du Pont's new booklet. Ask your dealer or write, enclosing 10s, to E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co. (Inc.), Textile Fibers, A-11047-L, Wilmington 98, Delaware.

CHANTILLY PIVE - PIECE PLACE SETTING ... $24.7

YO

Not "some day" but now. Now is the time to start collecting the finest china in the world... Royal Worcester Bone China. It's not an extravagant habit, really. For example: the magnificent pattern pictured costs only $24.75 the place setting. Others range in price from $12.75 to $49.50. That's no more than the cost of fine domestic china...yet Royal Worcester is far whiter, incredibly translucent, remarkably chip-resistant. And one pattern is prettier than the next. Look for yours (traditional or contemporary) at the finest jewelry, specialty and department stores near you... and enjoy Royal Worcester while you're young.

Send 25s to Royal Worcester, 11 E. 26th St., New York or 13 Elm St., Toronto, Canada, for the booklet, "How to Choose Fine Chine . . . Its Use and Care" plus color pamphiets of all pattern

A PIECE OFF YOUR MIND

MVE FROM NICOLETTE

Bear Sirs:

in the Christmas copy of LIVING For Young Homemakers about there or four years ago, there was a design for a little girl's room illustated in color. It was in red and withe with striped wallpaper. On the cover were two little girls looking into a stocking (The Sense of Gairy in the December, 1957 isme). We saved the magazine for a long time but a lady borrowed and del not return it.

I am eleven and Mummy was ging to copy this room for me when we moved into this house. Of all the designs Mummy has shown me, it is the only one I want. I should be very grateful if you could sed me copies of any pictures or instructions or please help to copy the room. It was so lovely.

Yours very truly, Nicolette Cato Crawley, W. Australia

P.S. Alexander asks if you have a room for him. He is twelve and lives for aeroplanes. I am afraid he is a nuisance wanting this.

> Love, Nicolette

Enton's Note: A copy of the December, 1957 issue was quickly dispatched, but Alexander's request left us up in the air.

ON APPROVAL

Dear Editors:

Congratulations on another excellent issue: January, 1960.

We all know that dreaming about a new home or improving an older one is a lot of fun. When the content of a magazine is as hodgepodge as a dream, however, and as disconnected, it can produce a nightmare of confusion for the reader when he wakes up at the back cover.

Confusion never has produced constructive thinking, and without constructive thinking, there can be no constructive action. You can make that "constructive action." Today's young people like to dream, of course—up to a point, but they also want ideas developed all the way. They want, as your January, 1960 cover urges, to "stop dreaming, start looking," When they get inside, they find ideas presented in a way that makes looking, thinking and acting easy.

You're doing much to shorten the gap between dreaming and acting, a circumstance I know your readers appreciate.

Jim Malone Chicago, Ill.

Dear Editor:

The old saying goes-I wonder about the title of your magazine.

A brief assessment of the value of the photographs leads my family to believe your magazine should earry the following title: LIVING For Young Millionaires. How about something for young homemakers for a change?

Mr. and Mrs. Lee C. Bright Kettering, Ohio

Dear Editors:

Being a "young" homemaker isn't so much a question of chronological age, I don't believe, as it is a matter of outlook. And the youth and vigor found in your pages every month say much for the dedication and perseverance of your staff in bringing to your public the kind of material that we constantly search for and thrive on.

My fiance and I liked the presentation of Casa Feliz (A Zenith in Fine Detail) in the January, 1960 issue for we have been very excited about this type of home with an entry garden. The feeling of warmth and solidness is also so apparent in this San Antonio house.

Marnie Randall Concord, Calif.

FURTHER SUPPORT

Gentlemen:

In A Piece of Your Mind in the March, 1960 issue, the letter on large families from one of your readers irked me indeed.

If parents have the means to support their children, I fail to see anything wrong with large families.

Along with each child comes the capacity to love him or her and each child increases in the parents the love of other people's children.

Our children will attain in the world as high a position as our love and their own ambition will provide.

narrative must be gathered from the accompanying word description. Thus, if the listener imagines that he hears the story as he listens to the music, he must realize that in actuality, he is lending himself to the suggestive power of the words.

One of the two Mozart works on the same disc is also unique, in that it was originally composed for a mechanical organ. We are informed that the work was recorded from an unpublished manuscript-Mozart's own piano transcription of the music. It is an impressive work, indeed. The record is completed by an Adagio, K.540 by the same composer, perhaps the slow movement of a sonata that was never finished. All the performances are by the young pianist Walter Hautzig, and they are excellent in every respect.

Monitor Records has come forth with the very romantic Grand Sonata in G Major, Opus 37, by Tchaikovsky. Coupled with this is the Sonata No. 9 in C Major, Opus 103, by Tchaikovsky's more recent countryman, Prokofieff. Both are given excellent performances by the pianist Sviatoslav Richter. On another Monitor disc, Richter gives a very impressive performance of another romantic work, Schuberts Sonata in D Major, Opus 53,

More familiar fare is included on an RCA-Victor release of Man sorgsky's popular Pictures of a Exhibition, in its original form a a piano solo. The recording was made by Vladimir Horowitz, at a Carnegie Hall recital in 1951.

Again in a romantic vein, there is a recent RCA-Victor disc present ing the complete Carnaval, One 9, by Robert Schumann, along with the same composer's Fantage. stücke, Opus 12, in performance by Ania Dorfmann.

The more venturesome muit lover might want to investigate a disc containing the complete piece music of Arnold Schoenberg, This record begins with the Three Pione Pieces, Opus 11, composed in 1901. and takes us through the last to piano pieces, written in 199 and 1932. They are written in the twelve-tone idiom with which Schoenberg's name is so intimately connected. All the performance of this difficult music are by Edward Steuermann who was closely amciated with the composer.

HOW TO CHOOSE AND USE YOURS

On the pages that follow, you will see eight "Fabric Wardrobes". Each presents one of the most popular color "families" in decorating today, and each includes both basic and accessory colors. Each wardrobe makes possible an unlimited number of combinations, so that each room can express its own individuality, and still remain within the framework of a total decorating plan. Here's how to choose and use your wardrobe:

- 1. Decide what you want! Look at all eight "Fabric Wardrobes". Each has its own basic color theme and each theme a "personality" all its own. One color theme will speak a special language to you. You will find yourself coming back to it naturally. Choosing your color theme is as simple as that. Trust your instinct ... it is the best guide you can use.
- 2. Pick a starting point! This will give you a direction in which to work, and even more important, this will get you started! You'll find that once the first decision is made ... the others will follow naturally!
- 3. Develop an overall plan! Even though you will not be buying everything at once ... a plan will keep you from making impulse purchases that might prove wrong for your "Fabric Wardrobe", and will help you estimate your expenditures and spend your money more wisely. You won't have to make decisions all over again with each purchase, and you won't get discouraged while your home is still in the process of being decorated. You'll be working towards a goal, and you'll know that when your home is completed, it will be right!

Whether you're a bride, a new home owner or a redecorator, we suggest you read all that follows. You'll find many helpful suggestions throughout. The First "Fabric Wardrobe"

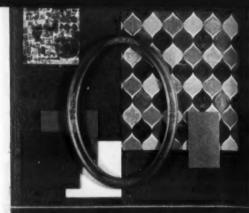

or: What every bride should know about a first home

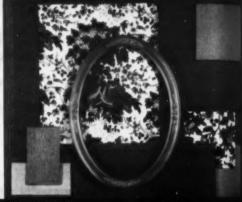

"Suppose I make a mistake!" Decorating for the first time can make the most self-assured person feel uncertain! Perhaps, then, the most important gift we can give you is the assurance that your first home will be everything you want it to be. We can give you that assurance, if you choose and use your "Fabric Wardrobe" as we suggested, and if you depend on the known quality of Waverly for your fabrics! You can also count on the expert advice of your Official Waverly Dealer. He can tell you how much fabric you'll need for each item, show you supplementary fabrics for your wardrobe, and can answer many of your other decorating questions. We know that he is well-informed, because Waverly's "Dealer Information Service" goes to department and fabric stores throughout the country! In addition, you have the special security that comes with Waverly Fabrics themselves! Waverly is the largest manufacturer of decorative fabrics in the world, and uses the most advanced methods for producing quality fabrics. Because of this, you get the finest quality, at a cost of just $2 to $3 a yard! And every yard in Bonded to give you complete satisfaction... not just when you buy it, but when you live with it in your home.

Remember . . . your Waverly "Fabric Wardrobe" is your color guide. Bring it with you each time you shop . . . along with fabric swatches and samples of wall and carpeting colors, as your own Wardrobe progresses. The surest soay to "remember" your colors is to have them with you!

Adding and subtracting for Redecorators

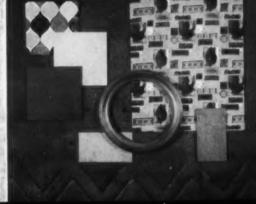

"How can I work with what I have and still give my home the coordinated look?"

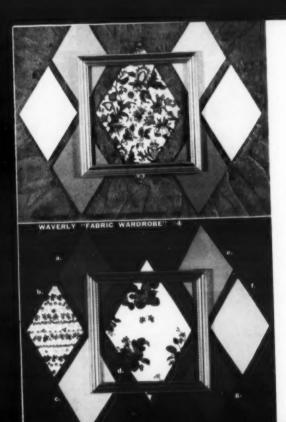

No matter how much or how little you plan to buy, pretend that you're starting out "fresh"! Which of the eight "Fabric Wardrobes" would you choose? Chances are it's one based on a color you're using now! Basic color preferences don't change, but the new way you coordinate and build from that color can give your home a completely new personality! Make your decorating plan as if you were starting from the beginning, and use it as a checklist. Decide now to keep only those items that belong in your new plan, and to change everything else! It is false economy to keep on working with something that will throw your color scheme off, or something you no longer like, or plan to replace in the near future! Even if you can't do everything at once, you'll be working in the right direction! There are decorating miracles you can work with fabric! Upholstered pieces. for example, need not be re-upholstered! Repaired, yes, if they need it. But with washable, long-wearing slipcovers in Waverly fabrics they'll LOOK re-upholstered at a far lower cost! Or try a new window treatment . . . or a completely different kind of pattern. With Waverly's tremendous range of solid colors to choose from, and the many new patterns created especially for the "Fabric Wardrobes"... there are limitless variations possible for your own "Fabric Wardrobe".

Don't trust your "color memory"! Bring this color guide with you each time you shop, together with a tuft of carpeting and swatches of whatever fabrics you know you will be using!

"I want this new home to be impressive, and to reflect our tastes, our way of life, and our standing in the community."

Decorating a new home can be an exciting and challenging experience. It is also a very big job! In the average living room, for example, there might be as many as fifty different items that must be coordinated! And there's no "margin for error"! Perhaps the best advice we can give you is this: "Take your time, keep to your plan, and don't compromise"! The total effect of your home is far more important than a small economy here and there. In fact, ereating this total effect is the heart of all your decorating problems! Can you achieve the professionally decorated look you've seen and admired in the homes of your friends? You're on your way to that look right now, because you're approaching the problem just as a professional decorator would! With a color theme, and an overall plan! You'll be pleased to know, too, that Waverly fabrics are "dosigned by decorators for decorators"! And that more decorators choose Waverly fabrics for their own homes than any other fabries in the world! They know that Waverly is synonymous with elegance and quality, and that Waverly fabrics have the authority and authenticity that make a room come alive! And when friends admire your home, and comment on the unusual patterns you've chosen, they'll be still further impressed when you tell them in design history! You can see and read these legends when you see the fabrics themselves, at your Waverly dealer.

Mutual Funds

Are Mutual Funds For

Many young families today are concerned with the same problem that puzzled not only their parent but their parents' parents: How to invest their money in the wisest, most profitable manner. Of course the goals of families who are planning investments will vary. Some will want to invest for addition income right now. Others will want to build a nest egg for their children's education, the establishment ment of a business, purchase of a home-or eventual retirement in the future.

If you are planning to invest, whatever your goal, then you certainly will want to explore Mutal Funds. These security buying plans are becoming increasingly popular with middle income familia Currently there are some 2 million individuals and institutions who are shareholders of investment or panies with over $15 billion invested in the securities of American corporations!

WHAT ARE MUTUAL FUNDS?

A Mutual Fund is a company or trust organized for the specific purpose of providing a way in thousands of individuals to combine their money into one large investment fund. This large sum the allows for proper diversification of investments, and the hiring of professional investment experts for full-time supervision. Investors participate in a Mutual Fund by buying shares—each of these shares represents an equal interest in the investment holdings of the fund. Shares are as easy to buy as are other Nationally distributed product. The cost of shares naturally vary, since each share represents proportional interest in all holdings of the Fund. Under accumulation plans, most Mutual Funds permit monthly or quarterly investments of as little as $50.00 or less.

The money paid in for Mutual Fund shares is then invested by the Fund managers in securities of various corporations confined mostly to those listed on the New York Stock Exchange. Dividend are then received from these companies depending on their earnings. After operating expenses and management fees are paid, the balance of the income is paid to investors, in proportion to their total investment. Mutual Fund shares can, of course, be redeemed for their market value on any business day

ADVANTAGE OF PROFESSIONAL GUIDANCE & DIVERSIFICATION

In any investment plan there is some element of risk. To make a profit you must be willing a take a loss. Business and economic conditions constantly change. Under a Mutual Fund accumu tion plan two basic factors are working for the investor, to minimize his risk and enhance his opportunities for a profit. These are diversification and professional guidance.

Diversification is in effect a "spreading of the risk". Because Mutual Funds are invested in many different companies in a variety of industries, the possible poor earnings of one company at a given time may be offset by excellent earnings in others.

Professional guidance-on a full-time basis-would hardly ever be available to the small investor on his own with a few dollars to invest. However because Mutual Funds pool many small investment into one very large amount, they can provide the advantage of fulltime, day-to-day supervision by expert counselors. The importance of such professional management can readily be seen. Currenth there are some 25,000 different securities on the market. Choosing among them is certainly no job for an amateur.

CHOOSING THE MUTUAL FUND FOR YOU

Mutual Funds are not "get-rich-quick" schemes. They are plans whereby people of average means can buy a share in American business. Every Mutual Fund has its own goals and investment policies. Before choosing one you should determine your own objectives.

If you are seeking more current income, then you will want a Mutual Fund whose basic objective is income now. If long term growth is important-for children's college or your own retireme then you'll want a fund that specializes in capital growth. The are plans, of course, which seek a combination of growth and i come. These vary in terms of risk, emphasis and success.

BEFORE YOU INVEST

All professional investment counselors will advise you: before you invest in stocks or bonds make sure you have: 1. Adequate call savings for emergencies. 2. Sufficient life insurance to provide for

When these two prerequisites are met, and you decide you want to put your spare cash to work, then determine your goal and choose a reputable investment firm. The advice of friends can be costly. no matter how well meaning. Information on the investment com panies represented on this page is available from their distributing organizations. General information on mutual funds is available from the National Associations of Investment Companies, 61 Broad way. New York, New York.

Who and what is an anesthesiolo-He is a Doctor of Medicine the has spent at least two years in estgraduate training, learning the exialty of anesthesia. His backmund consists of four years of -lical school, one or two years of internship, followed by a certified midency training program. The mident anesthesiologist sees appoximately 500 to 1,000 cases a year under the direct supervision of a qualified anesthesiologist, Fisally, after two years of residency and three years of practice, he is eligible to take his final board gam, If he passes this, he is then known as a Board Diplomate. All of this training is necessary because his is a very important and responsible role in the surgical or obstetrical drama.

Primarily, as we know, he causes the patient to become insensitive to pain by employing one or a combination of anesthetics. The principle types of anesthesia are:

General: Usually refers to the type of anesthesia during which the patient sleeps, Ether, chloroform and nitrous oxide (laughing gas) administered through inhalation come under this category.

Regional: Only one region of the body is insensitized. Spinal anesthesia comes under this category.

Local: An example of which is the injection of novocaine into a laceration prior to suturing.

Hypnosis: Insensitivity to pain is caused by hypnotic suggestion.

The choice of anesthesia used depends upon many factors prevailing at the time of the procedureprimarily the patient's general condition and the type of procedure to be done. The anesthesiologist must have adequate knowledge of the physical condition of the patient before he can administer an anesthetic. Some individuals are unable to tolerate certain anesthetics, and he must be able to foresee this possibility. In obstetrical and emergency surgical cases, however, he necessarily must make rapid decisions and here he calls on his years of training and experience as a guide. Often, he has only the appearance and reactions of the patient on which to base his judgment. Should he make the wrong decision, the patient's life is endangered. There can be no mistakes!

Once the surgical procedure has started, the anesthesiologist stays with the patient, seeing that adequate oxygen is being received by the brain, tissues and blood, controlling the blood pressure, replacing any blood which is lost and combating the patient's reflexesin essence, keeping the patient alive. We now see why the anesthesiologist's job is one of importance and responsibility and why it requires so much training. We also understand why the surgeon's selection of an anesthesiologist must be made with as much care as has been taken in the choice of the surgeon himself.

In obstetrical anesthesia, the anesthesiologist is responsible for not one, but two lives-the mother's and the baby's. The anesthetic which he employs must be enough to ease the mother's pain without harming the unborn child, since the child will receive as much apesthesia as the mother.

Let's examine the typical case of Mrs. Virginia X., who is about to give birth to her first child. Her obstetrician has taken care of her throughout her entire pregnancy. He now calls in the anesthesiologist of his choice. Dr. A., who reads Mrs. X.'s chart and examines her, checking her heart, lungs and blood pressure. He then determines the type of anesthesia to be applied. Since this is Mrs. X.'s first baby, and his examination has shown her to be in good condition with no foreseeable complications, his choice is a continuous caudal (a regional anesthesia which arrests pain without stopping the muscular contractions of the uterus necessary for birth). Once Mrs. X. is under the anesthesia, and the process of birth is begun, Dr. A. must stay with her and guard her life exactly as he does in any surgical case.

As soon as the baby is born, he becomes Dr. A.'s responsibility, entirely. Any immediate complications, respiratory or otherwise, Dr. A. must handle, Baby X. was fortunate-no serious problems. Although Mrs. X. didn't realize it at the time, her baby's first physician, at the most crucial moments in his life, was an anesthesiologist.

Enlightening news

Although electricity of itself is invisible and insubstantial, it can brighten your rooms through bulbs of varied shapes and sizes to provide everything from the softly glowing luxury of simulated candle glow to the never-failing source of year-in, year-out electroluminescent lighting. At the same time, familiar, plain-jane bulbs grow sophisticated with new contours, longer life-spans.

Flat, luminous plug-in panels, cool to the touch and using less than one cent of current per year, emit a soft green glow and make fine night lights for hallways, etc. Left, Westinghouse; right, Sylvania

Complementing the sparkling sconces, candlesticks and girandokia this setting are three flame-shaped bulbs, designed to harmonize with their glittering surroundings. In the first, Flamescent, which is both shatterproof and weatherproof because of its unusual construction, there glows a soft gas-shaped light; a spidery filament gleams from the second. Sparkelite; and light shimmers from the cut-glass third, Crystalier. Available in many sizes and with both miniature and regular size bases. Duro-Lite

Including the youngest of us, almost every American homemaker has an ingrained respect for tradition. Fashions come and go in furniture, in silver, in glass and china and all the trappings of the home, yet we remain a nation of collectors, constantly easting back to the past, re-examining it and surrounding ourselves with it as knowledgeably as we know how. The fact that we are behaving this way in the face of an important and interesting development of contemporary design does not imply that we are impeding progress: we are simply enjoying ourselves. Our grandparents got the same amount of pleasure out of selling good antiques for a song and investing in curious Mission and Golden Oak horrors. They ignored the charm of what we call early American furniture-the simple school of design that produced what can be roughly classified as "country" pieces, and they were oblivious to the elegance of colonial furniture-eighteenth-century American design at its glittering peak. Then, in time-perhaps because the automobile made it so easy, it suddenly became the rage to go "antiquing," and any kind of cobbler's bench was doubly dear if it was a bargain. Today, there are not enough good antiques in the United States to fulfill the demand for them, and those that are available come high. Hence the reproduction, which has had a troubled history. Probably because we are sentimentalists, we have settled in the past for second best-for versions of early American and colonial pieces that were travesties: bad color and line incorporated into a "Ye Olde Taverne" look that had nothing to recommend it except price. Today, we are wiser; we have learned not to buy a pig in a poke, and designers and manufacturers are re-creating the true simplicity, or, as the case may be, the true elegance of our forefathers' handiwork. They have realized that a craftsman's materials can speak for themselves, and that it is foolish to tamper with unbeatable perfection of line. As a consequence, our traditional possessions today may have been made yesterday, yet they are as American as Thanksgiving Day, and even though they are inanimate, they have emotional impact because their traditional integrity has been redefined with a faith and an honesty that scorns the fly-by-night, the shoddy and the spurious.

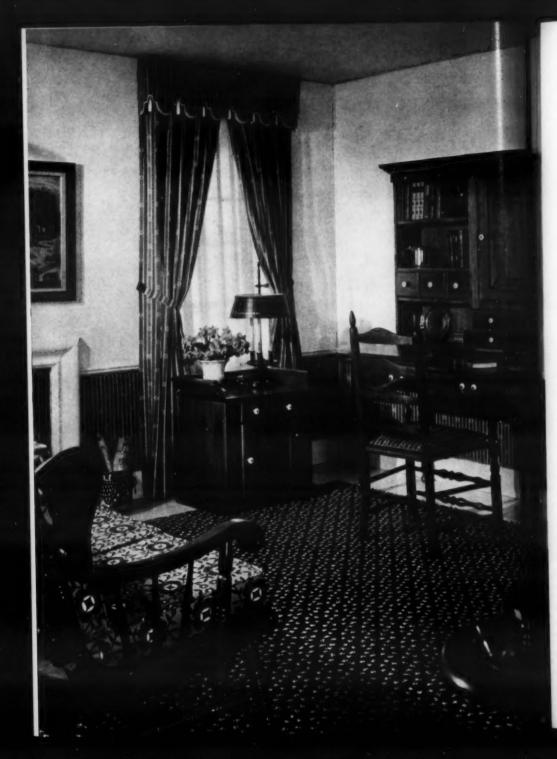

A fter two hundred years, the descendants of simple storage pieces are regrouped in the modern manner to combine function with sedate charm

The all-purpose room is a way of living we like to think we discovered, yet we must remember that the colonial kitchen was very all-purpose indeed. In our twentieth-century grouping of eighteenth-century pieces, however, we are infinitely more prodigal: the massing of cabinets and bookcases at left, for example, not only provides a complete wall of miscellaneous storage, but a heroic-in-size "breakfront" that is both decorative and practical. In the little dining area above, three chests are used to house the silver-glass-and-linen amenities of dining, and there is a certain nostalgic pleasure in remembering that although John and Priscilla Alden most likely made do with a single chest, it must have been very like one of these. The rugs, too, hark back to another era, and although they were braided by modern machinery, they have the loving look of handcraftsmanship. Mapleand-birch pieces from Baumritter's Ethan Allen group; love seat by Shaw. Rugs: left, wool blend; above, all cotton; wallpaper by Strahan. Setting at B. Altman & Company, New York City

In their simplicity, these rooms have an appealing youthfulness, a friendly invitation to be lived in

The quality of youth, in furniture, can be paradoxical. Counterparts of these pieces have existed for centuries, yet in both the originals and reproductions, there is an adaptability, an opening-of-arms to decorative mood, and a pristine quaintness that can only be described as young. Just as engaging is the use in the room opposite of a fabric dado defined by stock molding-a decorator's version of the well-known glimpse of petticoat, and one you can duplicate yourself. Furniture by O'Hearn; rug of carpet-orlon and wool. Drapery fabrics in these rooms: the Americana collection at Sears, Roebuck

The cabriole leg made its debut in this country sometime after 1725—the first appearance in American furniture of the S curve, and the first genuine touch of simple elegance. In the room above, the cabriole is used on both the highboy and lowboy, and a variation of it is seen in the table's pedestal legs. Even the chairs, simple as they are, have a definite refinement in their turnings and finials. Solid cherry furniture by Franklin Shockey; wool carpet

Proof of conformability: in the room at right, furniture with more than a touch of Duncan Phyfe about it—the chaire, incised eagles, the love seata's curved arms—is in perfect harmony with a setting as vivid as fabric and paint can make it: a union of very gentle nostalgia and out-and-out whimsey. Therein lies this furniture's facility: it never dictates a rigid treatment or a one-track approach. Globe furniture; all-wool rug; Colorizer paint

The closet was unknown to the Color and even so able a woodworker a list. Alden had to bang his working closhs a peg and keep his Sunday sait is drawer. Queen Anne furniture began its career in this country in the first half of the eighteenth century and has been flourishing ever since. Its carmarks are always the cabriole leg, flame finials, beauty of wood and hardware and an elegantly quiet reticence. Here, it is set against a background that is both romantic and amusing; the window treatment and the tester-bed canopy are imaginative, graceful and gay, yet wholly in keeping with the spirit of the furniture. with fourteen-foot ceilings, let us confess that we couldn't resist the temptation to "play house" in this resplendent fashion. We must tell you however, that authentic as it may seem, our setting is not a historic house at all, but a background created for display at the Jordan Marsh Company in Boston. The rooms are showcases for ideas which can be interpreted in homes of much more modest proportions—homes devoid, luckily, of huge windows to clean and towering walls to dust. Young home makers with a hankering for the elegance of the past may consider themselves fortunate, too, in knowing that they can take advantage of the eclecticism of past generations of collectors whose proud possessions have been reproduced for today's homes with the same fine scale, the same gleaming wood patina. In the collection of furniture on these and the next two pages, each piece is individual; each is distinctive for its inherited grace and warm interpretation of a period in the history of American furniture.

Each is expressive, also, of the growing refinement in American appreciation and in craftsmanship in general. If we choose to be heirs to elegance, we can collect a piece at a time or, in one fell swoop, span a generation:
the dictates of our budgets are our guide, and the time required to build a collection is more than compensated by the pleasure of watching it grow.

A familiar wood rediscovered

In eighteenth-century American furniture, mahogany was a proud and respected wood. Then, somewhere in the evolution of wood finishes, certain misguided souls undertook to gild the lily to the point where its natural texture and color were obscured with stain and varnish until it resembled almost anything except mahogany. Today, the dignity of a fine wood has been restored to be used with extraordinary skill in Morganton's Tideswater collection. Business mixed with pleasure

The whys and wherefores of running a household are infinitely more pleasant when accounts and memoranda are supervised at a desk nonetheless efficient for its good-looks and pleasurable surroundings. We elect the bedroom as the ideal spot for the home office—particularly when it enjoys the gaiety of color and pattern of a co-ordinated wallpaper and fabric. A haven for retirement

We cling to our premise that the family room is for the family, that the kitchen is the heart of the home and that the bedroom is the individual's private domain. Here, in what the eighteenth century called a "felicitous setting," one retires from routine and family, and even if the outside world is only a step away, the closed-door policy ordains peace, solitude and composure

The serenity of tradition

The quickest and most mollifying answer to the boxlike room is distinctive furniture, warmth and an elegant window treatment. In the bed-sitting room opposite, undistinguished architecture goes unnoticed; one has eyes only for the poster bed, the really beautiful desk with its tambour-doored compartments, and the window's mitered, envelope valance. Restoration: a labor of love ringing the past back to life requires time, patience and uplift and a jewel of a house

Car Tarrytown, New York, there lies what Washington Irving called "A little lap of land, among high hills, which is one of the quietest places in the whole world." He called it Sleepy Hollow, and it is as quiet today as it ever was, and perhaps even more heautiful. To it, six years ago, came George and Mille Hasen, New Yorkers looking for an eighteenth-century house with enough land to insure screnity. They found it—six acres of it called the Old Sleepy Hollow Farm, and on it, a derelict farmhouse over two hundred years old. Beneath its neglected caves, however, there remained enough charm to spark in the Hasens the sense of discovery and to start them on the arduous, maddening, unbelievably exciting path of restoration. Intent upon retaining everything that was retainable, they researched and studied at Williamsburg and Sturbridge Village, determined to know how to assess each facet of the old house as the ravages of time were removed. They succeeded, as you will see, and not only had over four fascinating, engrossing years, but possessed themselves of a unique home and the emotional satisfaction that comes from creating something as perfect as loving care can make it.

Den-sitting room is a pleasant snuggery with sections of charmingly crude pine paneling and an unusual cornice that encircles the room like a deep molding. Both the drapery and the wallpaper are of documentary design, and on the heirloom side of the ledger are an eighteenth-century Pennsylvania Dutch desk, a seventeenth-century oak oval table and a very rare Windsor chair. The hooked rug is a collector's prize because of its quaint motifs and a hargain hunter's joy to boot: it cost the endearing sum of twenty-five dollars

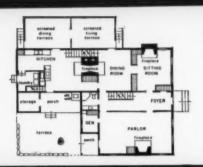

Living room is decorated in a style Mrs. Hasen calls Farmer's Formal. She wanted none of the museum overtones antique collectors' houses are often so prone to, but simply an informal formality, so to speak. Here, there is comfort, the sheen of fine woods, the glowing color of old oriental rugs, the elegant shimmer of fine porcelain. The Recamier sofa with its eagle feet is one of two; the other pieces run an eclectic gamut that pays far more attention to intrinsic interest than te source or any stress on a conformity of periods

Master bedroom is a wity blend of antiques and reproductions; for all their authentic air, the beds, for example, are new. The Hasens, who like their comfort, find old beds too difficult to accouter. All the same, the canopies and coverlets are hand-knotted and woven in a pattern that goes back to colonial Virginia. The carpeting, too, is today's work, although its motifs are as documentary as the Declaration of Independence. Everything else is old, and the china-and-wrought-iron chandelier and Dutch fireplace tiles are gems

The kitchen is something of a tour de force in that it is as smoothly functional, as easily maintainable as culinary engineering can make it, yet with no sacrifice of atmosphere. The flavor of the house is sustained, a trick accomplished by combining modern appliances with pine cabinetry and replica hardware. Stainless-steel ovens are set into a wall of old brick, and the decorative possibilities of the little fireplace corner are played up to the hilt. This is the original mantel, and on its other side, the fireplace opens into the dining room. The old creamery is now a laundry, and the glittering new floor conceals forever a kind of lausaret that may have been used to hide runaway slaves in the days of the Underground Railseny

All of which prompts you to wonder: what is life like behind the of Williamsburg? How do young families feel about living in what has been called the largest museum in the world? What do they think of raising their children in so rarefied an atmosphere? The answers to all these questions boil down, of course, to the fact that people everywhere are about the same. What varies is how they adjust to different backgrounds and Colonial Williamsburg is as different, at least on the surface, from the rest of twenticentury America as a candle from a light bulb. A visit to the small homes that few people ever see

Phil Thorp is one of very few apprentices learning silversmithing as a handcraft. From Connecticut, he attended William and Mary College, worked summers and part-time for Colonial Williamsburg during which time he met wife Barbara. To save for a trip to Europe, he agreed to work full-time in the Silversmith's Shop which led to his career

Living in Williamsburg was a life-b bition of Jacqueline Mills. As a child a several visits with her parents and fell with it. The great majority of Colonial Williamsburg's staff are young people. George Eager, director of the Press Bureaus, photographer John Crane, above right and left respectively, and Ricks Wilson, manager of Merchandising Services, below, are family men with young children. George and John review photographs before publication release. Bicks, who is in charge of sales of publications and souvenirs, goes over improvement plans for the publications' desk at Information Center with manager Louise Briggs

Eager boys, Bruce, 6, and George, Jr. 9, are growing up with more firsthand knowledge of early American history than most boys but they are still more interested in playing with a tadpole than watching the pre-Revolutionary Militia Musters held every week on the Common. Barbara Thorp is well aware that the tiny restored house she and Phil rent has a charm never found in new houses, while Phil cites the advantages of having the landlord ("C. W." as Colonial Williamsburg is referred to) foot the bill for maintenance of lawns and gardens. All he and Barbara have to do is enjoy them, not difficult at a rent of $52 a month, including all utilities, for a little gem of a house. Margaret "Tuny" Mc-Mahon is quite articulate about the advantages and disadvantages of living in Williamsburg, which, as she says "are so intensified you're always aware of them. Your house is beautiful, your garden a show place and your restaurants are famous. But it's rather disconcerting to look up blowzy-eyed from your morning coffee and find a tourist coolly observing you through the window and irritating to find someone taking a movie while you're emptying the garbage. Life in Williamsburg, nevertheless, has the advantage of a world crossroad-you're bound to see everyone you know, sooner or later." Tuny, like all the others who live in officially restored houses, works for Colonial Williamsburg. Sometimes the perfection doesn't make up for having to hide an airconditioner or put a TV antenna in a tree, in short of having to be constantly on display. Over-all, however, living in Williamsburg is a matter of balancing charm with necessity and that's perhaps about what it is anywhere. To see how young Williamsburgers manage to do it, we are going to visit five households, all belonging to men and women, you, as a tourist, are apt to see during their working day but none of whose homes you are likely to have an opportunity of viewing.

Ricks and Marion Wilson live in a house that was reconstructed

The Elizabeth Carlos House which the Ricks Wilsons rent was built in 1772 by the milliner for whom it was named. Destroyed by fire in 1912, it was reconstructed in 1954 on the basis of excavations and the memory of old residents. Later, an early photograph was discovered which tallied with the reconstruction in all respects but one: there were only two front dormers on the original house. Thereupon, one was removed, so painstaking is the effort for authenticity in Williamsburg! The Wilsons' main hobbies are decorating and collecting and refinishing old furniture. With a real understanding of old houses, they planned their interiors as authentically as life with two small daughters allows. Joan and Carol are delighted and Strudel, the dachshund, enjoys sniffing flowers in their Colonial garden.

Teamwork in the kitchen is high on the list of the Wilsons' accomplishments. Both Ricks and Marion enjoy trying new and exotic recipes and have formed a Gourmet Club which meets whenever any of the members has found a new recipe and has enough leeway in their food budget to invite the group. Not long ago, Ricks and Marion with one other couple staged an authentic Roman dinner. Below, their living room which shows Ricks' handiwork in the refinished piano and armchair, a Louis XVI bergère which he found in an antique shop. Opposite, the dining room with the simple mantel and woodwork painted authentic Williamsburg green, with white walls. Ricks says the only disadvantage is that "yes can't buy the property" to which Marion adds, "it spoils you for anything dis

The smallest house in Williamsburg

Jackie Mills' home would be unique, if only for its size, but she has decorated it so eleverly that it becomes unusual on till another count. Originally David Morton's tailor shop, it was destroyed over the centuries and reconstructed according to foundation dimensions, only 12' by 24'. In this space, a living-dining-bedroom, a kitchen, bath and storage space were efficiently planned. Jackie wisely swided confinement in furnishing, finds the house more than ample for her needs.

In one room, a scant 9' by 12', Jackie Mills has a fireside sitting room, with pieces carefully chosen to proper scale, a dining corner with drop-leaf table and when the table is set aside, a bedroom with the bed lowered from a paneled closet. Beyond this room is the entrance hall with open kitchen and opposite, a bath and storage closet. Only on one count has Jackie gone all-out in her decoration—with pictures, which she loves and which she has hung even in the bed niche. She studied painting for a year and thoroughly enjoys experimenting on canvas in spare time. Her interests are painting, her career and travel, with what she calls "people-collecting" drawn into all three. At the Information Center she meets people from all over the world, which whets her appetite for travel. Her house is located in one of the quietest areas in town, where it has the advantage of not being taken for an exhibition building by tourists

Before-photograph of the Carter-Moir house taken in 1890 keyed reconstruction which was completed in 1951. One of the mantels in the original house was found in another residence and provided additional clues. Excavations permitted reconstruction of a number of outbuildings, too-kitchen, dairy and smokehouse, all grouped around the Eagers' rear terrace and all used by them in one way or another. The terrace is a favorite meeting place for the neighborhood children and shenanigans run high. However, Bruce and George, Jr. have their formal moments, too, as at dinner, opposite. George, Sr.'s den is the scene of poker gatherings of the Lord Botetourt Society. Thad Tate, center, assistant director of research, says the games are as wild as the stakes are low

The Carter-Moir House on Francis Street is among the finest of the reconstructed homes. It is well-suited to the George Eagers' pattern of living, since a constant flow of out-of-town visitors is part and parcel of his career in the Press Bureau. It is equally well-suited, fortunately, to the demands of two energetic, young boys. Mary and George like this dual pace, find it prevents life from falling into "the small town pattern." It also helps to keep Williamsburg's emphasis on the eighteenth century as an atmospheric background rather than a limiting horizon. All in all, they have the best of both worlds.

The Thorps' storehouse was built in the 1720's

One of the most remarkable things about Colonial Williamsburg is that small outbuildings have been given full exterior authenticity and interior livability at the same time. The reconstructed building which Phil and Bobbie Thorp occupy was originally a storehouse behind the home of merchant William Prentis. The doors, made of horizontal boards inside and vertical out, show it was constructed like a vault. Yet none of this is reflected in the way the Thorps have arranged it as a home. There was no kitchen, only a sink, so Phil created one, screened it with a book-wall-room divider with counter space on the kitchen side.

The Ludwell-Paradise property on Duke of Gloucester Street is one of the prizes of Williamsburg. The handsome brick main house had survived the centuries and was the first property bought as part of the Restoration. The old kitchen building had been destroyed, so it was rebuilt in 1932 on its exact site from eighteenth-century materials gathered in the area. Last year, the structure was further remodeled for modern living and Margaret Cecil McMahon, or Tuny as her friends call her, took possession.

The beauty of American

The first of the crafts to flower in the New World was the work of the silversmith. It reached this ascendancy both for economic reasons—there were no banks, and silver represented true wealth—and because its excellence was based on the age-old tradition of craft. The silversmith not only combined the highest skill with the prestige of working in a precious metal, but often fulfilled the function of a banker in his community.

Today, we have banks, but silver is still precious, and, in a proud and honorable craft, an unchanged respect for perfection continues to sustain the very high quality of workmanship that has existed for well over three hundred years. If we have not surpassed the work of early craftsmen, we have at least developed silversmithing as an art—giving fresh interpretations to inherited forms, combining the old with the new, ceaselessly exploring the particular elements which create a living artistic tradition.

Before you are six examples of the work of contemporary silversmiths. The oldest pattern of the six was first presented over fifty years ago; the newest is in the process of currently being unveiled to the public. Each of them reveals the beauty of the metal through superlative design and workmanship, and each is the result of the vital growth of a venerable craft in our country today. How to remodel outdoors the Nils Eklunds, of Orinda, California, have discovered a whole new world of pleasure outside their home. The house itself, not large but charming and eminently comfortable, called for an extension of living space to the surrounding lot, a wooded sloping site with a magnificent potential. Landscape architect John Vogley came up with a plan which provided an interestingly-shaped, triangular terrace immediately adjacent to the dining room and kitchen and sweeping around the entire south elevation, taking advantage of the afternoon sun. A wooden retaining wall was built along the south bank, which slopes upgrade, to create a large, level courtvard-for lounging, play, outdoor dining and gardening-the latter in small perimeter beds and triangular boxes which repeat the pattern of the court itself. A brick wall was built at this boundary to give privacy from the driveway and a road which passes to the south. The wall is of the same red brick as large rectangles which alternate with concrete segments to create the patterned feeling of a bright checkerboard. Redwood strips define the striking pattern. Believing that variety is the spice of outdoor living. John Vogley created, in contrast to the highly designed courtyard, a naturalistic garden area near the road which features spring bulbs. ground covers and native shrubs—a sylvan setting complete with a brook and a bench for those moments away from household cares.

Geometric pattern was created for a striking terrace by alternating rectangles of brick and heavily textured, pebbled concrete. This paving is as practical as it is attractive, can easily be hosed or swept down, a point worth careful consideration in garden-remodeling projects. The rectangular design is punctuated by triangular redwood plant boxes which jut out from a privacy wall into the paving segments. Small, informal beds alternate between the boxes. The wall screens the view of the motor entrance and road, also serves to give the effect of a treetop view looking north over the countryside. Color and comfort bring a new lile to a familiar stand-by n the well-ordered household of a few decades ago, the first days of spring were the signal for the bringing down from the attic-or up from the basement-the "porch" furniture: a swing or hammock, a collection of wicker chairs, and various oddments ranging from pine-needle cushions to wind chimes. Today, the indoors moves outward in somewhat gayer guise: rivaling nature in the brilliance of its coloring, terrace, garden and indoor-outdoor furniture sits among its surrounding foliage like flowers-very durable flowers, to be sure, but still orchidaceous. Iron, aluminum, wood, bamboo and rattan, all lend their talents to pieces of simple or fantastic design-contemporary, Victorian, Chippendale, Chinese or Venetian. You may lounge in a chaise the color of a delphinium, dine in a chair of hot geranium-pink, or, if you would rather look at flowers than sit on them, relax in purest white or ebony-black. Whatever the color, you will sit in comfort, nothing lacking on the horizon but an iron deer, and if you had a Victorian grandmother, that antlered creature will keep its wide patrician eye on you, too.

Plant your salad bowl now!

By JEAN HERSEY

A crisp salad! What is more delicious on a summer day, especially if you have raised all the ingredients yourself and picked them fresh and dewy at dusk or in the early morning. Salad plants are highly decorativefrilled lettuces, perky chives, pale green basil. A small garden of these and their friends is a delight to look upon, requires but little area in which to grow and a minimum of care and upkeep. One amusing aspect of such a garden is that, besides the conventional lettuces, radishes and such, it can hold a number of surprises. Did you know that violet blossoms-not just petals but the whole flowers, necks and all-add a fine favor to salads? Slices of raw asparagus, fisely sliced, even marigold petals and nasturtium leaves greatly enhance not only taste but appearance. In ancient days, people ate the herb borage for courage. Toss a few of these sky-blue blooms over the top of any salad today. and nothing can stop you!

Suppose you plan to have a salad parden this year. If space is limited, you can delegate a portion of an already existing flower or vegetable bed to letteres and some of the other salad material which will be eaten early before the surrounding plants need space. But it is most satisfying to have a special area exclusively for salad plants. Here you can fling caution to the winds and be really original. You can raise salads in an area as small as three feet by six, six by six or twelve by five. The material adapts well to various sizes and shapes. You could have a fine unconventional salad circle—a wheel garden six feet in diameter with rows of lettuces as the spokes; or a fan garden, a half circle twelve feet in length and five feet at the widest part of the curve. You may also devise your own styles and forms—be as fanciful as you like.

Size and shape, once determined, any of these gardens can be located somewhere at the edge of your lawn on the south side of a wall or fence. No special soil is needed beyond average good garden earth. Wherever it grows, it will not only be a decorative but a truly productive space. In choosing a site, select a level piece of land with at least five hours of sunlight daily -more if possible. A very slight slope to the south is also good for rapid seed sprouting; an eastern slope is fair; a northern or western slope is to be avoided. To start a new bed, dig and turn it over to a spade's depth. Remove sods, rocks, old roots, all extraneous material, and add plant food. Cover the area with a good organic fertilizer—sheep manure (100 pounds, $6.00), cow manure (100 pounds bovung, $6.30) or cottonseed meal (100 pounds, $7.50). Be generous with the food, allowing fifty pounds for the smaller gardens and one hundred for the others. Most salad plants have the best flavor if grown quickly; good enriched soil helps achieve this goal as does nothing else.

You will grow some salad ingredients from seed, and some from young plants set out in May. Certain of the latter are perennial and will return each year. Seed may be sown now in the open ground in the garden itself, and the sooner the better so it will have the benefit of current spring showers.

Radishes start the procession. Plant in rows or solid areas one quarter of an inch deep, firming the soil on top of the newly-covered seed. Four weeks from the day you sow, you will harvest your first crop. Quick-growing radishes are mild; the slower they grow the hotter they get. Radishes can be sown close to other plants since they will be all caten up by the time their neighbors get underway.

Buffie Johnson, our designing cook-of-the-month, is one of America's leading abstract painters, and one of Long Island's most distinguished hostess-cooks. Born in New York City, she studied at the Art Student's League, at U.C.L.A., in Paris at the Académie Julien. and with William Stanley Hayter. In the late 1940's, she embraced abstractionism wholeheartedly and evolved a lyrical style which suggests the poetry in nature without mirroring reality. She has had fourteen one-man shows both here and abroad; her work now hangs in ten American museums, and she is being currently shown at the Whitney Museum in New York. Her most recent commission was a gigantic mural for the Astor Theatre in Manhattan called New York Summer Night, a panorama so vast that it had to be painted in 224 sections and then assembled at the theater. One of her favorite of coctions-and a constant "request" from guests-is a venof paella, the famous Spanish dish, made entirely from e food-a commodity easily come by on the Long Island show With it, she serves herbed biscuits and a green salad, and procedes it with cocktails and what she calls a pantry-shelfeaten with vegetable sticks. Let's look at some cold facts

A freezer can save you time energy money

In our Designing Cook series, we have found that most of the couples we have visited rely heavily on their freezers or the freezing compartment of their refrigerators. They're busy people and must budget their time. Although many of them are apartment-dwellers and have comparatively little room for a separate freezer, all have said that a freezer would be one of their first considerations if more space were available.

The freezer is a timesaver

- It allows you to budget your time and energy, to cook and bake your family's favorite recipes in double or triple quantities when you feel like it or have extra time. It takes no longer to make a large kettle of soup than a small one.
- Freezer-to-range-to-table utensils are time- and worksavers, wonderful for casseroles, stews, meat pies, or deep-dish fruit pies.
- The freezer permits you to prepare company meals at leisure so you'll have time to rest and enjoy your guests. It also encourages one-dish meals that the children or your husband can heat when you give up to an ache and take to your bed.
- It works like magic for quick-chilled dishes—mousses, aspics and all frozen desserts.

The freezer as a menu-planner

- Most housewives get into a rut when it comes to daily meal-planning. Plan your meals by the week. If you change plans, go out for dinner or have a sudden inspiration for a special dish, no matter: your frozen foods will bide their time.
- · The freezer provides an opportunity to incorporate

Regard it as your creative assistant, menu-planner and one of the most dependable servants you ever had leftovers so they no longer appear as leftovers. Whe you have a leg of lamb, don't try to get your mone; worth, meal after meal, until your family con scream. Slice and package it with a little of the gray in meal-size portions; heated in aluminum foil, will taste as good as the day it was roasted. The same is true of meat loaf, not roast and yeal.

- Most cooked sauces—especially meat sauces as gravies—are great freezer stand-bys. They make quick work of pasta, rice and a wide assortment of dried bean dishes, give flavor and variety to the leavents of meat.
- · Sherbets and ices add sparkle to fruit desserts.
- Stock your freezer with variety so you're never a quandary as to what to serve. Let your freezer se gest the menu; that's one of its duties.

Use your freezer with imagination

- Some housewives use the freezer simply to present and store food. It can do a great deal more than that For instance:
- Freeze fresh or canned fruit in round containers as slice with a hot knife for a dessert or salad. Cut so the centers of the circles for a garnish.

When one of our friends recently went on a highprotein diet-a good excuse for steak every nightshe found that the exchequer was saved by the freezer. She watched the papers like a hawk for steak specials and found she could get top-quality meats at a saving of as much as twenty-five cents a pound. She bought in quantity; then, by having the steaks trimmed and the lean trimmings ground, and by using the suet for cooking and the bones for soup, she also managed to get interest on her savings. The freezer, of course, protected her investment.

- You'll be surprised how much even a family of two can save on leftovers alone. The favorite dish of one of our designing cooks is a vegetable casserole with cheese sauce-a delicious potpourri of barely a spoonful each of carefully "held-over" vegetables.
- Fresh vegetables and fruits bought at peak quality and lowest prices accumulate savings rapidly-especially for large families.
- Finally, remember that savings depend on individual families and how conscientiously they plan their menus. Use your freezer imaginatively: its maximum performance depends on your creative ability as a planner, a shopper and a cook.

Selecting a freezer

Your choice of a freezer will depend on a number of variable factors in your own home situation.

- How large is your family? A good rule of thumb is to allow four-to-six-cubic-feet of storage space per person, with room for expansion. Be generous in estimating your needs if you want full value from your freezer, maximum savings in your buying.
- How will you use your freezer? If you use it mainly for storage of foods bought in quantity at bargain prices, buy a chest type—not particularly aesthetic, but practical and efficient: no space is wasted on shelves, for instance. If you want it for daily use, however, and plan to keep a wide variety of commercially packaged and home-frozen foods on hand, buy an upright, with shelves. It is easier to find foods in an upright than in a chest.
- Where will you locate your freezer? A chest can go in the kitchen or laundry, tool shed, garage, basement, mud-room, or even back porch or breezeway.
 An upright, since it will be in constant use, should be either right beside the refrigerator or under a counter nearby. Perhaps it will fit in a closet.
- How much freezer space do you now have? If it is only a compartment in a one-door refrigerator, you will definitely need a separate freezer, in order to capitalize on the full value and variety of frozen foods. If you already have a two-door refrigeratorfreezer and still need more freezer space, your best bet will be to get a chest for most efficient storage.

Tips on freezer buying

- Buy from a reputable dealer whom you know and, if possible, with whom you have dealt before.
- Without fail, fill out and mail in to the manufacturer the warranty card that comes with each freezer. Only by doing so will you be protected.
- Be wary of combination deals through which you buy a freezer plus a supply of frozen foods. Make sure that the food plan promoters are reliable and bonded, the food they supply is of a well-known brand, and the variety offered is satisfactory. In the long run, you probably will find that a good freezer purchased without any food plan or other sales gimmick is the best arrangement for you.
- Consider seriously getting a small generator to keep your freezer going in the event of a power failure particularly if you live in an area where such failures are not uncommon. It can often save almost its total cost in foods kept from spoiling.

New freezer features

The top three shelves of one of the 1960 upright freezers has see-through removable grille fronts. These grilles tilt down and convert into highly convenient loading and sorting shelves—nal stepsavers when you have to rearrange or select packages; the eliminate the need for moving packages to an adjacent counter.

This is the lower section of a two-door freezer. Upper half has shaling; lower part, as shown, a bulk storage area with a swing-out basks that makes foods easy to get at. Ice-cube trays are under basket; easylerach ice-cube storage is in door compartment. Cold air loss is reduced when only one door at a time has to be opened as you use each section.

Shallow "hookshell" storage on the door of this upright freezer permits efficient placemate of packages in a single row. The various Boss are always cany to find and take out, with an necessity of removing other packages to get a one you want. Note swine out meat compartuant

Current trends in freezers

To compare today's home freezers with models no more than ten years' old is like comparing a modern hi-fi set with an old exposed-horn phonograph. And with every season that passes, important new improvements are added. For example:

- Several manufacturers have relocated the freezing coils, thus making more room in the box for the frozen foods it is intended to hold.
- Automatic defrosting has arrived to stay. It is a feature that usually heads the lists of suggestions by homemakers' panels, and a good many models now have it, defrosting either at the same hour each night or after a fixed number of door openings.
- Certain freezers are now being manufactured with remarkably efficient new types of insulation. As a result, the walls of the freezers using these insulations are only half as thick as in older models, thus giving considerably more room for food packages in the freezer while maintaining the same over-all outside cabinet dimensions.
- Perhaps the most important recent innovation in freezer design provides a frost-free interior, in which neither the food packages nor the surfaces of the freezer ice-up. Labels remain easy to read, packages do not stick together, and no space is taken by thick layers of frost. Defrosting is forever unnecesary in these freezers: but, since leaks and spills are possible from occasional poorly-wrapped containers, you should wipe the interior at least once a year.

Twentieth-century living in an eighteenth-century setting demands ingenuity. Colonial Williamsburg was meticular about details when the town was restored. Many of theat tempts at disguise can be copied by homemakers desiries bona-fide traditional appearance or simple camouflage

Once the required house "on back," this little building not provides storage space for our thing from roller skates to fin wood. Two carriages may at one time have fit easily into this build when it performed its original function as a stable, but today's no are quite different. Two cars necessitate two doors. To preserve a original design, the second door was unobtrusively cut into the eng nal clapboard wall, a clever idea for today's determined tradition his is not a vegetable garden, but small amount of these four sicked when very, very young and under add a delicious note of favor. Sow all these one-quarter of m inch deep in three-inch-wide ned no thinning beyond that mined in the picking. Spinach is eady to use first, and gone by the ine the chard is edible, Spinach, herefore, may also be planted dose to other material. Thin out derd plants when two inches high se they stand four inches apart. You soon begin eating chard outer leaves, and new fresh ones coninually emerge from the plant cenm. This goes on all summer and een after a frost or two. Beet tops and a delicious flavor, and with heir red stems, a gay note of color s well. Carrots are to be picked soung and slivered finely. Nothing a quite like a young, home-grown, practically unborn carrot-freshsown, fresh-pulled, and eaten within the hour.

Private resident signs are needed when charming exteriors beckon eager visitors. In the David Morton Shop, the problem is nicely solved with this inconspicuous mail slot. Inside door conceals mail storage box

At this same time, plant lettuce needs in rows or in a solid area, nearly one-foot square. When the seedlings are two inches high, thin to stand four inches apart. Divide the roots carefully for this process and water for several days afterwards until the tiny central leaf perks up and begins to grow. Only then are they on their own. Pick every other lettuce when very young: this leaves the remaining plants eight inches apart with room to develop further.

Nasturtium seeds, marigolds and borage go in any time in early May. The appealingly shaped nasturtium leaves, gathered young and tender, impart a fine note, while marigold petals bestow a special tang and a gay touch of color. Borage seeds develop into a silver-green plant with engaging furry stems and starry blue, most attractive flowers.

The plants to huy start with lettuces. The seedlings which you set out in early May should be edible the first week in June, perhaps sooner. The seed you sow will not be ready to eat until July. All lettuce is high in vitamins A, B, B₂ and C. The green lettuce leaves possess higher vitamin content that the white. Don't carelessly cast aside the outer bright green leaves, or favor the inner white ones.

Oak-leaf lettuce actually resem bles a cluster of oak leaves. It comes very early from seed and is harvested all summer, Matchless may also be picked all season. Ruby is an unusual, red, early lettuce worth growing for its special flavor and color. Bibb lettuce comes early, and Salad Bowl the earliest of all. Great Lakes is slower but grows fine, firm heads. Boston forms loose and fluffy heads; Romaine stands tall, upright, dignified and decorative. For some of these varieties you must buy and plant seed, but a number will be available in small plants, depending upon the versatility of your local nursery.

Tomato plants, in all shapes, sizes and colors, are the pride of the local nurseries in May. You can set them out safely when all danger of frost has passed; they are susceptible to chilly nights. Try the small, yellow pear-shaped, the cherry tomatoes, or the large reds and yellows. And to hasten the harvest-time, if possible, buy pot-grown plants with blossoms already beginning to flower on them,

Parsley is slow from seed and if you buy the plants, you are weeks ahead. The single variety is an Italian favorite, but still we cherish the extra-curled double. One pepper plant will yield delicious green slivers to the salad bowl, as well as piquancy to picnic sandwiches. A chive plant is, of course, a must, Chop up the tubular foliage in not only salads but soups. On a hot summer day, jellied consommé made, perhaps, from bones of that broiler and topped with chopped chives is a treat. The lavender chive blossoms are attractive in the garden; these may also be eaten; they have a pleasant tang. Do plant a few onion sets. Onions in the salad are basic, home-grown, especially juicy and desirable. To grow onions, you buy "sets" (tiny, hard brown-skinned onions). Plant these in rows or clusters just under the ground surface, each one an inch from the next. To harvest, pull every other one, thus giving those between a chance to grow larger.

Plant your salad

Home-raised sweet basil is delicious in its subtle flavor. There is a peppery little plant growing three to six inches high called Curled Cress, sometimes Pepper Grass. Just a touch in the salad adds special character; it is also delicious in cream-cheese sandwiches.

You may not have room for an asparagus bed on your land, yet still have a yen for the flavor. So compromise and buy three plants for the salad garden. When the stalks push up in early spring, their tips are rich purple and, when no more than four-inches high, may be picked and cut into the salad. They are high in vitamins A. B. B. and C. and in addition, the asparagus will return every year.

One broccoli plant you must have. Broccoli, harvested as the head is young, tight and deep green and sliced fine, gives any salad distinction. Successive heads develop all through the growing season.

In early spring, the tiny leaves as well as the blossoms of the violet are an unusual addition. These also will return each year. The flowers actually taste as violets smell, and this flavor combined with lettuce is most surprising and fine. To be really exotic, make lettuce and violet sandwiches, arranging a few petals along the edges so they show, and while you are waiting for your newly-planted salad garden to reach the edible stage, pick a few wild violets. You'll have a double reason now. One for bouquets, one for salads and sandwiches.

There is a minimum of care and upkeep needed to maintain the salad garden. Beets, carrots and spinach need no thinning beyond that done as you pick. Keep everything free of weeds. Along in June, when all seedlings have been thinned and are hearty and thriving, add a two-inch-deep mulch of buckwheat hulls. Spread after a good, hard rain, this mulch holds moisture, reduces weeds and has a generally good effect on everything.

Stand in the midst of your little garden, admire the beautiful curles elettuces, the perky red and green beet tops and colorful flowers, and plan the evening salad. What will it be tonight? The fragrance of nearby flowering tobacco drifts your way while the thrush in the offing carols his sunset song. Pick and choose—a leaf here, a flower there, feeling their coulth and freshness as you drop them in your hasket. What a happy prelude to salad making!

Power lawn mowers make the news

I lawn is one of a home's most valuable external assets—if it is the althy and neatly trimmed. However, since grass grows, is a mowers are an outdoor essential; and as of 1959, over 60 perent of them were powered. The trend toward increasing motoristion will continue in 1960, too, since most manufacturers have abled new features, many of them very valuable, to their lines. Betwith we offer a cross-section of advances in power-mower design for the current year; and we believe that you will find among them a model that is tailored to your requirements and budget.

This riding rotary mower also performs two of the more onerous skittional chores that are involved in lawn care; cut grass-collecting and leaf-mulching and removal. Large-size bag is easily emptied. Tore

Red mowers give exceptionally even trim to lawns. This unusual model includes a grass-collecting basket in front of the mower, rather has behind. It's easily adjusted, and trims close along walls. Jacobsen

A functional new rotary mower pulverises the cut grass and then air-blasts the fine mulch down into the sod. Raking is eliminated, and the mulch serves as a growthboosting humus that conserves soil-moisture and minimizes possible dangers of erosion on terraced lawns. Bolens

Sacrosanct Stripes

The custom of wearing a necktie that sports the official stripes and colors of a particular school, fraternity or stripes and colors of a particular school, fraternity or organization is spreading rapidly among American mea. Originally, the tradition was observed exclusively in England among the "Old School Boys" of Exon and Harrow. Certain upstart American schools without so much as a by-your-leave adopted the idea and ever since the social climate has been noticeably cooler between graduates of the schools involved. Lately, the idea has been taken up by private clubs and industrial companies, forging everstronger bonds of camaraderie among the wearers.

Stronger bonds of camaracerse among the weaters. There is no telling where the sport ultimately may end. In fact, it occurred to us that the idea could be taken over by the ladies for use in the home. Why not, we thought, design E-Z-DU® Wallpapers in stripes whose colors match those of women's schools and colleges. These striped wallpapers would be easy to apply as E-Z-DU is pre-pasted and needs only to be cut to length, wet and sponged smooth.

Enthused with the possibilities, we sounded out the idea on the wisest lady we know who promptly shook her head, "Can't you just see a graduate of Vassar or Smith visiting the home of an alumnus of Cornell, U.C.L.A., Wisconsin or even good old P.S. 99 and discovering her Alma Maser's wallpaper stripes and colors!"

Well, it seemed like a good idea...however, if there is any lady in our audience who would like to have a striped wallpaper, the Imperial dealer can offer same in a most attractive selection from our E-Z-DU collection..."old school stripes" notwithstanding.

FOR AN EXOTIC GARDEN

Japanese landscaping skill has fostered an unusual industry. Among others, Verkade's Nursery in New Jersey produce exotic plants by grafting cuttings of oriental variations and roots of the American varieties. Through distributors like Headacres Farms in Sands Point, N.Y., these plants are available. able at roughly 50% above the standard American varieties

The living-room window of this home affords an excellent view of a slow growing, 15-year-old Alberta spruce. Its oriental flavor is framed and contrasted by miniature-leafed Carolina rhododendra

In this and following illustrations, plants are shown at the first-season-growth stage, and in their garden homes after they have reached maturity. Here, the ground-embracing Japanese maple is encircled by taller trees, forming an arresting focal point. This "weeping" tree grows slowly, remains small all its life long

EDITOR'S NOTE: Since our Council was introduced in the August 1939 issue, hundreds of you have written to ask specific questions about your child's problems. Below, a letter from South Bend, Indiana, is answered by Dr. Robert G. Shadick, Co-ordinator of the Agnes Russell Center, Teachers College, Columbia University, New York City.

The problem of the too-shy child lear Council: Although our little four-year-old daughter, Dorothy, sems bright and playful with my husband and me, she refuses to 'sarm up' to anyone else. She hangs her head and pulls away sen from the Sunday School teacher whom she has known for more an a year. Often, when the doorbell rings, she hides under a bed at in a closet—sometimes so successfully that I can't find her until long after the visitor has left. We try to tell ourselves that this is just a "stage." but it has lasted for more than a year and seems a legetting worse, not better. We wonder whether or not there is smething we have done wrong. It's especially important now, became she is due to start kindergarten next fall.

Mrs. D. B. South Bend, Indiana

hear Mrs. D. B.: The behavior of your daughter is not at all unoumnon in children of her age. People who specialize in the eduation of young children often do not recommend educational sograms that meet only once or twice a week for children who are three or four years old. Children of this age have a limited sense of time and do not remember the teacher and class well sough to think of the program as a familiar experience that has secured regularly in the past and will continue regularly in the latare. They still may be unsure of what "yesterday" and "tomornow" mean. I don't think your daughter's coolness to the Sunday Shool teacher is surprising.

The fact that your daughter runs and hides when she hears the factell is undoubtedly disturbing to you. Parents often like their didfen to greet visitors very much as a little host or hostess. This was the children appear very attractive and parents often enjoy approval of friends as a result. It is possible that you would like the type of recognition and therefore push her into social situations that your daughter enjoys this game of hide and seek even though a don't. To have Mother "hunting high and low" can give a severa-old a great feeling of power.

Sometimes children do not pass through a stage of development a quickly as they should. As often, the behavior associated with tage is unusually pronounced. If this should be the case with a daughter, it does not necessarily [Continued on page 184]
